SKY RAY HOOKSETT'S DRIVE IN MOVIE THEATRE

E. F.

A HISTORY

- OWNER- ARMAND BOURQUE
- OPENED MAY 7,1949
- CAPACITY- 500 CARS
- CLOSED CIRCA 1985
- ONE SCREEN WITH SNACK BAR, KID'S PLAYGROUND AND MOTEL

AMENITIES

TRAIN RIDE

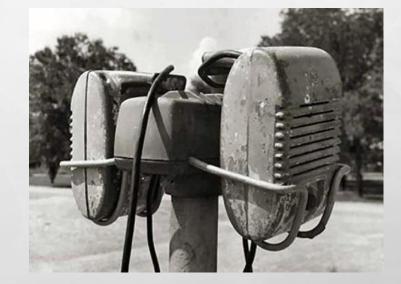

SKY-RAY patrons were always welcome aboard the free train ride that circled the outdoor "autotorium."

2

A Ch

SKY-RAY 1328 HOOKSETT ROAD

PROJECTORS

A group of Holy Name Society members from St. Patrick parish here succeeded in getting the management of the Sky-Ray Drive-In in nearby Hooksett to withdraw what they branded as an "objectionable" co-feature of a two-film program. The group picketed in front of the airer on the night of April 22. The picture was "She Shoulda Said No," which was advertised on the Sky-Ray marquee under the title, "Girl Wouldn't Say No," while the other screen attraction was "Because of Eve," with title changed to "All About Eve" at the Hooksett outdoor theatre. Approximately 200 automobiles were at the airer during the two-hour picketing period. Three town policemen and a state trooper were on hand and the only incident was a few remarks made to the pickets by a bystander leaning on a police car. The Holy Name Society members carried signs reading "This Picture Condemned" and "Do Not Patronize This Movie."

Controversies

But the theatre made news in 1969 when John Laughlin, Jr. — then manager of the Sky-Ray D-I — was the first person in the state to be charged with violating New Hampshire's newly crafted pornography rule for showing Russ Meyer's Vixen. Laughlin was found innocent

"RUSS MEYER'S VIXI

Biole startes, barries residente, scattering desi accusato policitaria de accusato de la contractar accusato policitaria de la contractar accusato de la contractaria menter menter

